Other Projects

- Device Controller (Java): May 2025
Developed a device controller application using Java to manage and interface with various hardware devices. The project involved implementing communication protocols, error handling, and real-time device status monitoring. By utilizing object-oriented programming principles, I designed modular components to facilitate easy expansion and integration with additional devices. The controller efficiently handles device configuration, data transfer, and error diagnostics, ensuring smooth operation and user-friendly interaction. This project helped me gain hands-on experience in Java development, multi-threading, and system-level programming.
- Project: Bidirectional File Transfer via UDP: May 2025
Developed a bidirectional file transfer application using the User Datagram Protocol (UDP) for fast, efficient, and reliable data exchange. The project implemented both a UDP client and listener, where the client sends files to the listener, and the listener can also send files back to the client. The system utilizes UDP's low-latency features while handling packet loss and reordering, ensuring seamless communication. This solution is ideal for real-time applications where speed is prioritized over guaranteed delivery.
